

SOLD!! 47 ACRES OF SECLUSION IN THE GAME RICH COUNTRYSIDE OF DINWIDDIE VIRGINIA!

SOLD

This tract has fields, trails, diverse timber, cutovers, food plots, & more. Secluded acreage just minutes from Interstate 85.

Great opportunity for a super recreational tract! Great for a custom home or a weekend getaway. 47 acres with just over 600 feet of state road frontage. 2 tracts being offered in one. This one comes with cleared land, food plot areas, trails, cutover, tall hardwoods, seclusion, and abundant wildlife. Off the beaten path you won't hear too many vehicles traveling down this road. It is still about 15 minutes to the town of McKenney and a little close to I-85. Less than an hour to the Richmond area this could be that spot for getting away from it all, relaxing, and getting some fresh air. Many possibilities await you year around to enjoy hunting, shooting, camping, 4 wheeling and counting the stars at night. Priced below assessment. Dinwiddie County was formed May 1, 1752, from Prince George County. The county is named for Robert Dinwiddie, Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, 1751–58. The county raised several militia units that would fight in the American Revolution.

Dinwiddie County was the birthplace of Elizabeth (Burwell) Hobbs Keckly, a free black dressmaker who worked for two presidents' wives: Mrs. Jefferson Davis and later Mary Todd Lincoln. Thomas Day was also a native; he was well known later at Milton, North Carolina, as a free black cabinetmaker. Another native son was Dr. Thomas Stewart, perhaps America's first free black 18th-century rural physician.[3]

During the Civil War the Battle of Lewis's Farm was fought along Quaker Road [Rt. 660]. It took place on March 29, 1865. This was the first in several attempts by Union General Ulysses S. Grant to cut Robert E. Lee's final supply line—the Southside Railroad—in the spring of 1865. Here the Union forces led by Brig. Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlain engaged Confederates under Maj. Gen. Bushrod R. Johnson. After sharp fighting, the Union troops entrenched nearby along the Boydton Plank Road, and Johnson withdrew to his lines at White Oak Road. The Union army cut the rail line four days later, after capturing Five Forks on April 1, 1865, at the Battle of Five Forks. Several other engagements were fought in Dinwiddie County, including the Battle of Dinwiddie Court House, Battle of Sutherland's Station, and Battle of White Oak Road.
