"Located in North Carolina's Coastal Plain region, was formed from Bath County in 1705. The area was originally inhabited by various Algonquian tribes.... The islands and inlets of Hyde County greeted European explorers from the early sixteenth century through the seventeenth, as colonies were first established in the New World. For a time, particularly in the early eighteenth century, the region's port communities and sea vessels were terrorized by pirate raids, including those led by the notorious Blackbeard. In 1845 Ocracoke Island-which, up until that point, had been part of Carteret County-was annexed to Hyde County. Today the island is part of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore."

The area offers many recreational activities for visitors including nearby Lake Mattmuskeet and other National Wildlife Refuges, Ocracoke Lighthouse and easy access to the Outer Banks and the historic towns of Bath and Washington.
